Sugar Loaf

Used as a farm sporadically since the 1700s, Nettle Meadow was in desperate need of a face-lift when Sheila Flanagan and Lorraine Lambiase purchased it, having decided they had enough of being lawyers in California.

Settling into the community was quite an adjustment from the Bay Area; nestled in the Adirondack Mountains and bordered by the Hudson River, Thurman is a sleepy hamlet of 1,200. And as in most small towns, locals are quick to notice new folks— especially if they're different. To wit: Eyebrows rose when the women bought guard llamas instead of rifles to protect the farm.

Nettle Meadow is a no-kill operation; it's also a retirement home once their animals stop producing milk, as well as a sanctuary for needy animals from the area. The welfare of its residents is the first priority at Nettle Meadow.

A simple triple crème with plenty of buttery flavor in its youth and complex earthy mushroom flavor as it ripens. Made from pure Jersey cow milk, which gives way to nothing but buttery decadence!
